Jimmy Wu Appointed to Aviation Suppliers Association's Board of Directors

Washington, D.C. – The Aviation Suppliers Association (ASA), representing 400 global member companies that purchase and distribute aircraft parts worldwide, appoints Jimmy Wu, President and CEO of Infinity Air to its Board of Directors. In addition to running offices located in Los Angeles, Seattle, Miami, India and South America, Mr. Wu is also the President of Allflight, an FAA 145 repair station.

"Strong leadership, solid vision and direction are the essential foundation to a successful association," states Michele Dickstein, President of ASA. "That is why we are pleased to have Jimmy join the Board and further drive ASA's efforts to build on our global association that positively impacts the aviation industry day in and day out. In addition to his strategic leadership, Jimmy brings more than two decades worth of international business development, marketing and financial experience to the Board that will help us further promote safety, regulatory compliance and ethical business practices across industry. His breadth of knowledge in global distribution and repair issues will ensure that ASA's vision represents the industry in its entirety."

"I am honored by this appointment and look forward to working with the Directors and members to continue to build the ASA and work to expand its global reach," says Jimmy Wu, President and CEO of Infinity Air. Mr. Wu adds, "As a company that has invested in ASA's quality system and supported its government affairs programs, I look forward to shaping the future direction of the Association to make sure that distributors continue to have a viable business capable of supporting our customers and exceeding the expectations of the international marketplace."

Infinity Air, Inc. is a global distributor of new and overhauled aircraft spare parts for the commercial, commuter, corporate, and cargo aerospace Industries.
